

Upcoming Italian Roadtrip & Babymoon

Written by Jill Kerr Tepe

Monday, 29 September 2014 14:02 - Last Updated Monday, 29 September 2014 20:30

This week is a flurry of activity as my husband Nick and I prepare to return to Italy.

We're celebrating our tenth wedding anniversary and imminent arrival of our second child, so it only seems natural to return to the last location I traveled while pregnant with my first. While our last Italian trip involved my sister Jenny and cousin Amber where we attended the Travel Bloggers Unite Conference in Umbria, followed by a stint in Positano, this trip is quite different. This time we're bringing along our good friends Kristal and Gary (Kristal came to Vienna and Prague with us in 2010).

Kristal and Gary just happen to be pregnant with their first child. And get this: Kristal and I have the same due date! Our husbands like to call this "Pregnancy by Committee" as we planned our autumn trip to Italy in the spring and the guys said, "Wouldn't it be great if the girls were both pregnant?" We obviously couldn't have planned this if we had tried! Funny thing is, I'll be 21-22 weeks pregnant at the time of travel (perfect timing - read my article on jet setting while pregnant here) and I was exactly 22 weeks when I was pregnant in Italy last time. Not ideal for wine tasting, but I make it work!

Upcoming Italian Roadtrip & Babymoon

Written by Jill Kerr Tepe

Monday, 29 September 2014 14:02 - Last Updated Monday, 29 September 2014 20:30

